A First Course in Design and Analysis of Experiments

In the design of experiments, optimal designs (or optimum designs) are a class of experimental designs that are optimal with respect to some statistical criterion. The creation of this field of statistics has been credited to Danish statistician Kirstine Smith.. In the design of experiments for estimating statistical models, optimal designs allow parameters to be estimated without bias and with ...

The water content needed for a target slump value is calculated in lbs/yd³ of final concrete volume. Slump is a measure of the workability (viscosity) of the concrete. Increasing the water content increases the slump and makes the concrete more fluid.

The RaLa Experiment, or RaLa, was a series of tests during and after the Manhattan Project designed to study the behavior of converging shock waves to achieve the spherical implosion necessary for compression of the plutonium pit of the nuclear weapon. The experiment used significant amounts of a short-lived radioisotope lanthanum-140, a potent source of gamma radiation; the RaLa is a ...

In this review, excerpts from the literature of thermobaric (TBX) and enhanced blast explosives (EBX) that are concentrated on studies that include their compositions, properties, reactive metal components, modeling and computations are presented.

1. Introduction. Ion mobility and mass spectrometry can be considered close relatives if not twins. Both can trace their lineage to research in the late 1890s when scientist first discovered that the application of electric and magnetic fields on charged particles generated from gas discharges could be used to separate charged species [,]. While mass spectrometry moved towards reduced ...
